Lillian Concord's blond hair flashed from London to St. Petersburg last night like a whole flock of sunbeams gleaming out on a joy ride, to the imenjoyment of the audience which witnessed the opening performance of "The Red Widow," the rapidforty-two-centimeter, bombproof istic show being staged by the Aborns this at the New National Theater A Skably smooth, well set and fin-production is "The Red Widow" ished production is "The Red Widow" and to Miss Concord must go premier honors, although the whole company acquits itself creditably, indeed, both in "dear old London" and in imperial St. Petersburg, where bombs burst in air and great mustached nihilists try to annihilate everybody in sight in metrical fashion. Tired business men, and others not so tired, will find much in "The Red Widow" to please them.

The plot has to do with Cicero Hannibal Butts, manufacturer of corsets and a colonel in the New York State National Guards, who succumbs to the by methods lawfully resulting from and a colonel in the New York State National Guards, who succumbs to the Wiles of the Red Widow and takes her to the Russian capital on his wife's passport. It was in the good old days when Petrograd was St. Petersburg, when volka flowed freely within the confines of the domain of the Little White Father, and when the imperial Russian police was in flower. When to all this are added a "queen of the hillsts," such as Miss Concord's Anna Marvaria, a chief of police, Scorpioff—sometimes called "Chief Scorpion," to his huge rage—to say nothing of convolutes "southers of the serior to the Miss Leonore Novasio made the most of the comical Lizette, the mattached Casquette girl, and her dance feature with Harry Short deservedly brought them both back again a couple of times for encore.

But aside from individual comment, which must not overlook Director Mandeville, and which might doubtless be greatly enlayed after one or two more performances, the opera went off pleas antly and furnished an enjoyable evening to the very large abdience, which frequently manifested its pleasure in applause.

Maicolm Dunn as the lecturer, whose lecture is an added entertainment. The military forces are shown in repose and in action, and the naval forces, including the big battleships and airships, as if war were in actual operation, except that none of the horrors of conflict are disclosed. One of the features is the firing of a torpedo, whose course is shown from the moment of discharge as far as the eye can reach.

Arrangements have been made to show this remarkable series of pictures at the Fanama-Pacific exposition, and it was due to the foresight of Manager L. Another entertainment, provided by real chickens in fine feathers, opened the bill with Kurtis trained pullets and a flock of humorous roosters that knew just when to crow.

"Colonial Days," an artistically realistic hark-back to brocade tuck-ups and powdered wigs, proved a delightful medium for the singing of old songs, the dancing of stately steps, a thread of romance and bubbles of laughter by a dozen talented people led by William A.
